Conserving the Land, Water and Scenic Character of Leelanau County

2018 Annual Report

From the Director

If there is magic on this planet, it is contained in water.

— Scientist Loren Eiseley

To the Leelanau Peninsula, water truly is magic. It's one of the most precious ingredients in everything we cherish: our glorious beaches, lush hardwood forests, and breathtaking scenic views. Water is integral to swimming, fishing, wildlife, wildflowers, cherries, strawberries, apples, wine. You name it. Clean water makes it all possible.

Thankfully, the world is getting serious about clean water. Global impacts like trash in our oceans and rising sea levels are causing world-wide alarm. Locally, awareness about how failing septic systems and storm run-off threaten clean, safe water is rising. Stories about water are making headlines nearly every day.

Clearly, the why of protecting clean water is about as straightforward as you could imagine. We simply have far too much to lose if our waters become polluted. But when we examine the how of keeping our water quality high, things get pretty complicated right away. Ask any government official, lake association member, watershed group or advocacy organization. A big reason is that water defies boundaries—it doesn't stop flowing at a property boundary or county line. It evaporates. It rains. It snows. The water molecules on your property right now will likely flow onto or under your neighbor's land in days or hours and sometimes in minutes. We literally can't live without water, but it is shapeless and always moving.

Where can we begin to tackle the question of how to protect clean water? A good place to start is with science and fact. Nearly 30 years ago, working with local experts like Dr. Tim Keilty and Walt Nielsen, we began collecting and testing water samples from Leelanau's inland lakes and streams. We've known for a long time that pristine waters can be damaged quickly by human activities that occur near lakes and streams. Some examples? Poor forestry practices remove shade trees on stream banks, raising water temperatures that hurt fish populations. Lawn fertilizers and pesticides used by riparian landowners add nitrogen and cause algae to grow. Failing septic systems leach e-coli bacteria into our lakes. Too much pavement and rooftops and not enough natural land cover enables polluted storm runoff to quickly enter waterways and degrade our lakes and streams.

Thirty years ago, the Conservancy made a commitment to protect Leelanau's clean water. We have employed one of the best, most effective tools available—identifying the lands through which our waters flow and partnering with private landowners to permanently conserve as many of these lands as we can. By keeping land in its natural state, using permanent buffer strips of trees and natural plants to protect lakes and streams, we have been quietly working to counter threats to clean water since our inception. In the three decades since, we have permanently preserved 47 miles of shoreline on our lakes and streams. While this is no small achievement, we have so much more work to do to ensure high water quality.

Today, we are more motivated than ever to accelerate the pace of these efforts. In 2018, we collaborated with the Kalchik and Parker Families to protect 1.6 miles of key tributaries. We also initiated several more projects you'll be hearing more about in the coming months. Permanently preserving the natural character of the lands through which our waters flow is one of the very best insurance policies there is for clean water.

The good news is the quality of our inland lakes and streams remains high. But we cannot take it for granted. The threats are real. And as Steve Martineau, our Chairman, rightly states in his message, we must come together as a community to be guardians of our precious Peninsula. Together we must do more to keep up the vital work of conserving our clean water. Because clean water is, and should always be, Leelanau's magic ingredient.

Chairman's Message:

We all need to be guardians of Leelanau

Recently our Executive Director, Tom Nelson, talked about how the Conservancy channels people's love and passion for Leelanau into making good things happen. And that many people see the Conservancy as the "guardian" of Leelanau's beauty and ecological integrity.

Since then, I've thought a lot about the concept, and our commitment to conserve and protect our forests and meadows, our streams and lakes and the very rural character of the peninsula itself.

Certainly, the Conservancy, through its great staff and many volunteers and supporters, has begun this process over the last 30 years. It has become the guardian of nearly 3,800 acres of the peninsula's most iconic beautiful lands: the majestic forests of Palmer Woods, the trails through the sand dunes and woodlands of Houdek Dunes, the meadows of Chippewa Run, the DeYoung farmstead, the orchids found in the Soper Preserve, and the vital water resources and wetlands of Hatlem Creek and the Cedar River Preserve.

From its beginning, however, the Conservancy's leadership understood its limitations. It could never, by itself, accomplish the task of protecting all of our peninsula's land, water and scenic character. And, fortunately, the Conservancy has developed ways to expand its reach, to increase the number of "guardians."

Most significantly, nearly 200 land owners have worked with the Conservancy to protect over 10,000 acres of private lands over the last three decades. Each landowner has become a permanent guardian of important conservation values on their own land, protecting forever valuable farming acreage, the fresh water from seeps and streams, hardwood forests and wetlands, and crucial habitat for our peninsula's wildlife. While these lands are not open to the public, we all benefit by their permanent preservation.

Examples of our ever-expanding guardians of Leelanau include the Parker family's decision this past summer to protect

99 acres in Solon Township, lands which include 1,300 feet along a Type 1 trout stream, wetland shelter for bear and bobcat, deer and songbirds and prime and unique farmland. As it backs up to the Cedar River Preserve, the Parker acreage is truly a "highway for wildlife."

Just before the holidays, Ralph and Nancy Kalchik donated 75% of the project cost to protect their 115 acres near Omena from development. Their land is covered by both conifer swamps and northern hardwood forests and is crisscrossed by streams and seeps whose pure water ultimately reaches Grand Traverse Bay.

The Conservancy's volunteers are also guardians. These volunteers build and maintain our trails, keep invasive species in check, save and relocate native plants and wildflowers, and educate the Leelanau community on our lands and the importance of preserving them.

The Conservancy also collaborates with partners such as the Sleeping Bear Dunes National Lakeshore as well as the MSU Horticultural Research Station, assisting them in their roles as guardians for vital ecologically important portions of our peninsula. Personally, I would like to acknowledge the great work done by our lake associations, such as the Glen Lake Association and the Lake Leelanau Lake Association. Each understands the vital role that every riparian owner plays, encouraging their members to wisely use their land, to properly fertilize their lawns, to maintain their septic systems, and to be true guardians of their lake.

This is really the lasting message. To truly protect our beautiful peninsula, we need to understand the important role we each play in preserving our lands, water and the scenic character of our Peninsula. We all need to be guardians of Leelanau.

A Natural Wonder

Omena Couple Protects Ecologically Rich 115 Acres

Ralph and Nancy Kalchik have been married for 62 years. They met at Northport High School and other than a few years away at MSU and an army stint for Ralph, the couple has spent their entire lives at the tip of the peninsula.

Ralph grew up just a stone's throw from the home they built tucked in the woods off Tatch Road. His father started an excavating company that Ralph and his two brothers later purchased and called KAL Excavating Co. Nancy worked as an RN at the now-closed Leelanau Memorial Hospital until she retired in 2001. They raised one daughter here, who lives near Washington D.C. with her family.

The Kalchiks relish their simple, quiet life off the beaten path. "It's so peaceful," says Nancy. "It used to be that the only person who came back here was the meter reader. We could almost be hermits."

From their kitchen window they see a plethora of birds, from woodpeckers to bluebirds—and other creatures too. "The other day we saw a deer pushing a bobcat into the woods in order to protect her fawn," says Nancy. They enjoy the beauty of the pristine streams that wind through their land, dotted with bright yellow marsh marigolds in early spring. They talk of the trillium and Jack-in-the-pulpit that cover the hillsides in May.

The land is located near other protected lands, including the Charter Bird Sanctuary as well as the Mitchell and Putnam farms and other conservation easements on nearby Bass Lake, adding to the impact of this block of conserved lands. Meanwhile, multiple streams and seeps on the Kalchik property merge into Weaver Creek and ultimately, into Grand Traverse Bay. Preserving this parcel ultimately helps to protect the clean water of the bay.

Now in their 80s, Ralph says he has been "thinking for a long time" about protecting their land and is feeling a sense of urgency to get it done. "You go up this side of Tatch Road and there are now houses on both sides," he says. "I didn't want to see that. It feels like driving in the city."

Jim Charter, who was a friend and classmate, died last year and they attended a memorial gathering at Saving Birds Thru Habitat. Jim, along with his wife, Kay, founded Charter Sanctuary: habitat for birds that is protected with a conservation easement. "We knew that they had worked with the Conservancy to protect that place, and had read about others in the paper too," says Ralph.

The couple met with Conservancy land protection specialist Kim

Hayes. “At first the Kalchiks were hoping that they could do an outright donation of a conservation easement, which was so amazing and generous,” says Kim. “But after talking further it was clear that they needed some family resources to keep paying for the taxes and insurance.” (Even though taxes may be reduced by removing the development premium, the land still stays on the tax rolls.)

“We talked about the concept of a ‘bargain sale,’” explains Kim. “They ended up donating 75% of the value and were compensated for 25% of the value.”

They might have demanded more, but didn’t. “I’ve just come to like the place and didn’t want to see it change,” says Ralph. “Seems like something we could do for the people around here.”

“I feel lucky that my first solo land protection project is working with Nancy and Ralph to protect such special natural resources,” says Kim. “The project, with its perennial and ephemeral creeks, protects over 100 acres of the upper Weaver Creek watershed.” The rich conifer swamp and northern hardwood forest on the land are all home to natural wonders like brook trout, comb-tooth fungi, bobcats and bald eagles.

Adds Kim: “I honor their love for their land and am happy to help secure its protection for the future.”

Ralph and Nancy Kalchik protected 115 acres with a conservation easement.

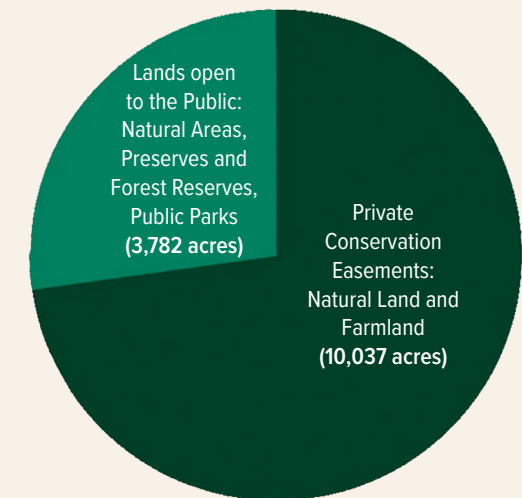

Why We Protect Private Lands

The Conservancy has worked with nearly 200 landowners like the Kalchiks to protect cherished, private family lands and we all reap the benefit. These places help to protect clean water, spectacular roadside views and wildlife habitat. When you are driving around Leelanau County, you may not even realize a landscape you love will always stay that way. Did you know that over two thirds of the lands we have protected since 1988 remain in private hands and stay on the tax rolls? Over 10,000 acres of working farmland and private natural lands are forever preserved with conservation easements. Read more landowner stories on our website.

Environmental Impact

If the Swan land were developed instead of preserved, what would the impact be? Matt Heiman, Director of Land Programs, says that conserving the Swan property “annually prevents five tons of sediment, 217 pounds of nitrogen and 20 pounds of phosphorus from entering tributary streams that flow into West Grand Traverse Bay.”

74 Acres Preserved Along Brewery Creek

Richard Swan grew up climbing trees and playing in the pristine stream on the land that has been owned by his family for the last 140 years. As an avid fly fisherman and self-identified tree hugger, he says he is delighted to have worked with the Leelanau Conservancy to forever protect this fragile cold-water trout stream and hardwood forest.

He worked with Conservancy Director of Land Programs Matt Heiman, who says, “The land is located in Elmwood Township, close to Traverse City and is under tremendous development pressure—potentially the highest pressure in Leelanau. It easily could have accommodated 30 home sites, which would have certainly impacted the stream and ultimately the water quality of Grand Traverse Bay.”

The Conservancy has purchased a conservation easement from the Swan family that will forever keep the land in its natural state. Richard donated 25% of the cost of the project, and a grant from the Clean Michigan Initiative along with your donations made it happen. The land, with its many groundwater springs and seeps, remains in private hands and is not open to the public.

Richard, 75, grew up in Traverse City. He lived within walking distance of Hickory Hills and often skied after school. Upon graduating from the University of Michigan, he took a job in the ski industry, and relocated to Reno, Nevada, his current home. But he comes back to Leelanau often and says he has been thinking for a long time about protecting the land and its pristine creek.

Richard’s 74 acres were originally purchased by his great-grandfather, Peter Swan, a young Swedish immigrant. Richard notes the timeframe of the purchase was about 1870, “six years before Custer’s last stand.” Peter didn’t homestead the land, but bought it from the man who did.

Peter reportedly panned for gold in California during the Gold Rush, which earned him enough money to buy the farm. Richard still treasures a nugget of gold that was passed down through the generations. Peter cultivated an apple orchard and a dairy herd, and grew hay and corn. He had four children, including Richard’s great-aunt Ella, who would play a key role in Richard eventually coming to own the family land.

Ella purchased the farm for $1500 from her siblings after her father died in 1918. But she did not farm the land, and it has been fallow for the last 100 years.

A beautiful centennial barn on the property whispers of its past.

“Ella inherited Peter’s adventurous spirit,” says Richard. “She was a modern woman and became a bread winner after being trained as a chiropractor in Illinois.” Ella and her husband, also a chiropractor, moved back to Leelanau and practiced out of a home they built on the farm. They had no children.

Ella took a liking to Richard, who visited the property often. When Richard was home from college one summer, he told Ella that he would like to buy the farm someday. He proposed making payments as soon as he was able. “She liked that idea, and I think that she also liked that I didn’t just ask her for it,” he says. When Ella died a few years later, Richard was stunned to learn that she had willed the land to him.

“It was mind-boggling that she left it to me and I feel responsible to take good care of it,” he says. Even though he or his kids will likely never farm the land, he hopes that someone else will on a 15-acre portion allocated to agriculture. As for the hardwoods, creek and wetlands, “they will stay natural in perpetuity, which is what I want,” says Richard.

From his home in Reno, Richard, a fan of national parks, closes by saying, “I just read last night in a World Wildlife Fund article that half the wildlife on Earth has vanished since 1978. That’s alarming. Every piece of habitat saved is an oasis for living things. As a nation, we should be preserving natural habitat on a much bigger scale.”

“Every piece of habitat saved is an oasis for living things.”

Protecting Farmland

Two Farms Protected in 2018, 10 Projects in the Works!

Status	Acres
Farmland protected through 2018	5,311
Seven projects (Fed. funded) expected to close in 2019	865
Three more applications in the works	370
Total farmland acres to date and pending projects	6,546

It won't be long before Leelanau's fruit trees burst into bloom, covering our hillsides with their one-of-a-kind beauty. That alone is cause for celebration, but there's more. In 2018 we protected the 190-acre iconic Putnam Farm in Omena, as well as 99 acres in Solon Township owned by Keith Parker. By the end of 2018, there were 10 more farmland protection projects in the works. The good news: seven of them—totaling 865 acres all over the county—have already received partial funding from the Natural Resources Conservation Service. Three more farms are in the application stage (320 additional acres) and we are hopeful that those projects, too, will be in line for permanent protection. The passage of the 2018 Farm Bill at year end, championed by Michigan Senator Debbie Stabenow, was great news. The Farm Bill provides 50% of the funding that organizations like the Leelanau Conservancy need to move farmland protection forward. Donations from members like you fund 25% of the cost, and landowners donate the remaining 25%.

"It all works together beautifully," says Executive Director Tom Nelson. "Private donations, while so important, can't keep up with the demand. Because of the federal programs, the pace of our farmland protection has accelerated and we are able to work with many more families who dream of their land being farmed by future generations." Through the end of 2018, a total of 5,311 acres of farmland have been preserved. "It's always challenging to raise the required match funds, so we're grateful for every dollar donated toward these projects. We are particularly grateful to the Friends of Farming giving circle, whose 54 members have pledged nearly $1.25 million to our farmland protection efforts."

It can take up to three years for a farm project to cut through the red tape of the application process according to Land Protection Specialist Kim Hayes. Land appraisals must happen. Title work must be ordered. Grant

Why This “Nature Nut” Joined the Heritage Society

Bobbie Poor’s love affair with nature started in the shadow of her grandmother, who owned a resort hotel on Bass Lake near Pentwater, MI. Bobbie and her beloved older sister, Claudia (Goudschaal) spent every summer there until Bobbie was 22, making beds, doing laundry and fetching guests when phone calls came in on their party line. Bobbie remembers her grandmother feeding chickadees from her hand and stories she told about being snowbound for days in her small log cabin, stoking the fire and happily reading National Geographics which had piled up during the busy summer.

During those long-ago summers at the inn, after finishing their chores, Bobbie and Claudia would head for the lake to swim or sail. “We had just glorious days there,” says Bobbie, recalling how Claudia fashioned their small dingy into a sailboat with a broomstick and an old shower curtain. They let the wind take them down the shallow lake, and it was Bobbie’s job to get out and walk them back to the hotel. She idolized her sister, four years her senior, who would later be the “magnet” that drew Bobbie and her family to Leelanau.

Claudia and her husband, Bob, an artist, owned a shop on Main Street in Leland and were among the first supporters of the Leelanau Conservancy. Before she died, Claudia was active in our farmland preservation efforts, and donated a conservation easement on her own beautiful land off Jelinek Road that today preserves views of the Manitou Islands.

The sisters shared a love for Leland, and a passion for nature and conservation. We told Claudia’s story back in 2010, and now we profile Bobbie, who has also given in so many ways. As a Conservancy docent, Bobbie has shared the wonders of our natural areas with hundreds of people on hikes throughout the years. Bobbie and her late husband, Jim, were among the first to join our Sustainers

Circle. When Claudia died, Bobbie was the executor of her estate, and ensured that a second parcel of Claudia’s land was also forever preserved with a conservation easement. Most recently, Bobbie has joined our Richard O. Ristine Heritage Society, and has listed the Leelanau Conservancy as a beneficiary for her IRA. So even after Bobbie is gone, she will continue to make a difference in Leelanau’s future.

“I have been humbled by the depth of love people have for this lovely part of our universe.”

“Having shared some of its magic with people who have come for hikes when I was an active docent or to programs given since, I have been humbled by the depth of love people have for this lovely part of our universe,” says Bobbie, who, at 86 also serves as a docent for the St. Louis Zoo, Saving Birds Thru Habitat and the Audubon Society.

“Age is a state of mind,” she says. “I don’t feel 86 but my body does occasionally remind me that I am.” She loves to teach—before her two daughters were born she worked as a middle school science teacher and later, served 25 years as a Girl Scout leader.

Today, she still loves to teach, to learn, and describes herself as “a nature nut.” Sharing her knowledge—like how many teeth a possum has (50)—and seeing “that spark when someone catches something and walks away with that knowledge is so rewarding” says Bobbie.

She’s also adamant when it comes to giving back. “Each person can make a small dent,” she says. “And everyone working together can help the whole picture. I get goosebumps when I think of the progress the Conservancy has made. You look at all the farmland that’s been preserved, and know it won’t turn into subdivisions. You can do things the wrong way in a community and erase what is precious. The Leelanau Conservancy is helping us to do things in the right way.”

applications are complicated. And landowners need to be kept in the loop every step of the way.

Kim says she is excited about how many projects are likely to close in the coming year. “Agriculture is constantly changing. There are ongoing challenges—from insects like the spotted wing drosophila to the tariffs that are impacting fruit farmers. Meanwhile, Leelanau is becoming a stellar wine-producing region. The great news is that no matter what form agriculture takes in Leelanau—whether it’s fruit, row crops or livestock—thousands of acres will forever be available for farming.”

Gifts of Land or Development Rights

Almost 200 individuals and families have made gifts of land or development rights to the Leelanau Conservancy since our founding in 1988. The generosity of these donors allows the Leelanau Conservancy to leverage fundraised dollars to conserve even more of what you love most about Leelanau. The names below reflect donors from 2018. For a list of all land or development rights donors, please visit LeelanauConservancy.org.

Richard O. Ristine Heritage Society

The Heritage Society recognizes donors who have shared in the mission of the Leelanau Conservancy by making a gift through a will, bequest, trust, annuity, insurance or other planned gift. This important group is helping to ensure the long-term financial capabilities of the Conservancy. If you would like information about this special giving circle or about making a planned gift, contact Leslee Spraggins.

Welcome New Sustainers!

Thank you, Sustainers, whether you have recently joined or been with us since year one, we are grateful for your participation in this important giving circle. Your annual pledge to support our operations ensures that our long-term goals to conserve Leelanau's land and water resources can be met.

"Peter and I discovered Leelanau County 10 years ago, and immediately fell in love with it. Each year we make the 14-hour trip with our pets from our home in Philadelphia, and stay for up to a month at a time. The area's natural beauty is extraordinary, and we return home renewed after every visit.

We decided to join the Leelanau Conservancy because its wide-ranging efforts to preserve the things we find beautiful and important are truly effective. The Conservancy gets things done; it makes a difference. We wanted to be a part of that, and as Sustainer Circle members have found that the monthly contribution option works best for us.

"Although I don't live in Leelanau County, not a day goes by that I don't think of its beauty. It's my absolute favorite place, and I hope to one day call it home."—Maria Garcia Bulkley

Thank You Volunteer Photographers!

Our thanks to everyone who has shared beautiful photos with us this year, in particular Mark Smith, who spent nearly 100 hours this year bringing you great photos of our natural areas. His work appears throughout this report. These photos (above of Clay Cliffs Natural Area, and below of Swanson Preserve) were both taken by him.

Mark and fellow volunteer photographers, you have helped to convey the message that There's No Place Like Leelanau in our print publications, social media, website and emails. We are grateful! We love receiving your images—especially those taken at our natural areas that show recreationalists enjoying these special places. Keep them coming: email to info@leelanauconservancy.org.

20 Years of Docenting

If you are interested in becoming a volunteer, contact Claire Wood at cwood@leelanauconservancy.org

Docent Ann McInnis has spent nearly 20 years leading hundreds of people on hikes at our natural areas. "Over those years I have met lots of wonderful people who are as committed as I am to saving the best of the best for the future. Experiencing first-hand the amazing Conservancy properties has sparked a keen interest, hopefully, in the attendees to preserve them in perpetuity for current and future generations. Those properties represent, in my mind, a 'Nature's Library' of Leelanau's amazing ecological and geological diversity... and a source for life-long discovery, inspiration, and recreation during these challenging times. We are all blessed to be here."

2018 Donors

We strive for accurate record keeping. If your name has been omitted or listed incorrectly, please contact Meg Delor, Development Director, at 231-256-9665 or mdelor@leelanauconservancy.org

John Fahey with Kelly Kin and pups Ollie and Maya. John says he increased his giving this year because “I feel it’s important to protect the land when and where we can and felt as though I could live without the money this year.” John hikes DeYoung Natural Area frequently: “I like how there is a mellow trail for most anyone to enjoy on the east side of Cherrybend Road, with the lake, pier and cedar trees. If you’re in for a little more of a challenge you can hop over onto the west side of the road. I love the rolling hills with trails through the woods, the small stream with little bridges and elevation changes. On these trails I can find a bit of diversity for myself and the dogs to enjoy.”
